

THE YELLIN CENTER
FOR MIND, BRAIN, AND EDUCATION

Clinical Psychologist

Understanding how each student learns—and what can get in the way—is a powerful lever to ensuring that children receive the personalized education they need to learn, succeed in school, and ultimately realize their dreams in life.

The Yellin Center for Mind, Brain, and Education, an innovative, student-centered, New York City-based independent educational assessment practice, seeks an early-to-mid-career licensed psychologist to join our multidisciplinary clinical team.

In this unique role, you will provide comprehensive, strength-based, psychoeducational and neuropsychological assessments, support the ongoing care of children and young adults, and help families understand and better navigate the educational system.

Many students experience the services provided by the team of professionals at The Yellin Center as having a therapeutic benefit, often increasing their self-esteem, supporting the development of their individual identities, and fostering a growth mindset.

If you are looking for an inspiring opportunity that will allow you to apply your expertise, gain new proficiencies, integrate dynamic new approaches across disciplines, and collaborate with like-minded professionals, please apply.

Responsibilities include:

- Conducting psychoeducational and other assessments as part of a highly-collaborative interdisciplinary clinical team
- Writing comprehensive reports and participating in the development of learning plans
- Conducting social-emotional assessments
- Working with school-age, college, post-graduate students and young professionals of all ages and grade levels, and from a variety of settings
- Collaborating with colleagues across disciplines to elucidate profiles of strengths and challenges and develop individualized treatment plans
- Developing and refining assessment tools and procedures

Successful applicants should meet the following qualifications:

- Deep commitment to supporting academic success and self-esteem in children and young adults
- PhD or PsyD in psychology/school psychology/neuropsychology or related field
- Licensed or Eligible for Licensure in New York State

- Experience conducting psychoeducational assessments
- Excellent written communication skills and experience writing clinical reports
- Highest professional and ethical standards

Additional valued attributes:

- Familiarity with a broad range of assessment tools
- Experience in the diagnosis and treatment of a wide range of challenges, including mathematics, reading, writing, attention, and executive function
- Strong interest in neuroscience and innovative educational practices
- Familiarity with current and emerging instructional programs and technology
- Comfortable working in small teams
- Familiar with legal framework that governs educational support

More About the Role:

This is a full-time position based in Manhattan, New York, NY.

Competitive salary and benefits are offered, including health, dental, long-term disability, and life insurance.

How To Apply:

Interested parties should send resume and cover letter to info@yellincenter.com and include "Psychologist" in the subject.
